America is the greatest country on earth, and we are blessed to live in one of its most beautiful and dynamic places. My parents, a teacher and a homemaker, raised me here, and taught me the values of hard work, community service, and standing up for what you believe. Those lessons have guided my wife, Trudi, and me as we've raised our children, and they've guided the work I've done in Congress.

As a boy, my parents took me along as they worked restoring alpine meadows on Mount Rainier. They taught me to respect the environment, and in Congress I've fought to protect our clean air, clean water, and forests.

I introduced the New Apollo Energy Act, a plan to invest in new technologies that will break our addiction to foreign oil, create millions of jobs, and address the threat of global warming.

As the father of three hard-working sons, a carpenter, a budding teacher, and a student, I find it unconscionable that Congress continues racking up spending that our children and grandchildren will be forced to repay. That's why I'm a deficit hawk, and consistently vote against measures that borrow against our children's future.

America needs a check and balance on unrestrained Executive power. I stand firmly behind my vote against invading Iraq and will continue insisting on a plan to end the war.

I am committed to keeping America secure, which is why I support implementing the recommendations of the bipartisan 9/11 Commission and have fought for funding to protect Washington's ferries.

Coming from a family of veterans, I believe we have a moral responsibility to those who fight to keep America safe. I've worked long and hard to improve health care for veterans and boost pay for military personnel.

It is an honor representing you.
